We are Going Out of the Commercial Dahlia Business

We have grown Dahlias first in Michigan, and then in New York for the past seven years. It's a grand, soul-satisfying hobby that we hope it will be our pleasure to enjoy as long as we live.

It was the problem of disposition of the increase in roots from a large private collection that induced us to enter the semi-commercial field three years ago.

We cannot complain about the amount of patronage during the past few years, it has been much appreciated. But we now find that we must return to the ranks—of amateur or sub-amateur—or something—

For Several Sound and Sensible Reasons, to wit:

First, our garden space has been restricted by building operations. Second, our regular profession of advertising agency work requires more of our time. Third, we were zealously altruistic enough to agree to become editor of the American Dahlia Society Bulletin. This is intensely interesting, but it leaves us but little surplus time in evenings formerly spent in commercial detail. Fourth, we have learned to our own satisfaction that we should not be in the trade end of horticulture without greenhouses, sufficient land, and many other requisites. For the present at least, therefore, we are going to leave the general commercial dahlia business to those who have the time and equipment to pursue it. So we are—

Cutting Down Stock of Newer Varieties to Show and Trial Garden Size

We have too many varieties and too many roots—for the space and time at our disposal. So, out they go at Bargain Prices—Hundreds of Prize Winning, Honor Roll and Certificate Dahlias—the kind you'll be proud to grow—at prices you can afford to pay.

This is Your Opportunity

We guarantee your money's worth and we assure satisfaction. Every root sold is vigorous and healthy. All suggestion of disease or stunt is removed from garden and destroyed immediately. You can buy with confidence.

You Can Save Money

Send for a trial order. Early, please! When a variety is sold out, you will be notified—and a second choice can be made, if desired. A deposit of 25% of order is required on hold orders.
